

NOTTINGHAM AND NOTTS FUCHSIA SOCIETY OCTOBER 2022 NEWSLETTER

JAYNE'S JOTTINGS

Over-wintering is well and truly on the way. I have completed over-wintering my mum's fuchsias. They are all tucked away, snugly in her greenhouse and her pelargoniums and a few begonias are in her shed. I can now concentrate on mine, and I have decided against potting any up at this time of year, but have marked the ones I plan to do so by using pea sticks, so I know which ones to pot up next year.

In fact I have used the following system this year: -

Pea sticks – in pots which I intend to pot up next year

Green Plastic ties – Potential Fuchsia Bonsai candidates (I seem to have a lot of these!)

Yellow Plant labels – Fuchsias which I have regularly put on the show bench and those which I feel are possible show exhibits for next year.

I have also segregated my greenhouses with the intention of putting all show exhibits together; Standards together; Fuchsia Bonsai together, and so forth. I have tried to do this for several years now, but to no avail, so hopefully I will be more successful this year – time permitting!

However, I can't stop myself from taking extra cuttings, even though I have tried to restrict it to my favourite ones; I have taken over 120 cuttings – I just hope some survive – with not having a heated greenhouse, taking cuttings at this time is always a gamble for me! Fingers crossed.

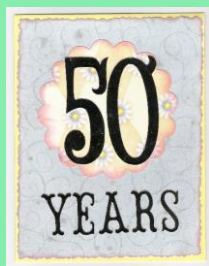

PROJECT 2 - FUCHSIA BONSAI

As I mentioned above, I have set aside quite a few plants to work on next year, so my greenhouses at the bottom of the garden (where my rabbit hutches used to be!) is now a designated Bonsai area.

Having no heated greenhouses, I actually overwinter my bonsai the same way as I do all my other plants: -

- I give them a trim
- Defoliate
- Keep them slightly moist

In fact, I have lost more Bonsai plants through the hot summer months than over winter. I have previously located my bonsai plants in the greenhouses situated on the patio, which gets full sun and have lost them as they have frazzled in the heat. For me, they survive better over winter, even in the shallow bonsai pots.

OVERWINTERING FUCHSIAS

We must all be thinking of overwintering our fuchsias now, so here are some tips I found...

- There is no point in trying to force them to continue flowering, rather encourage them to rest (what a shame!)
- Reduce the amount of watering you give to your fuchsias which are still outside.
- Consider bringing all plants under cover.
- Make sure that your storage area is clean and free from pests.
- The plants themselves must be free from pests and diseases.
- Remove all leaves.
- Prune back some of the straggly stems.
- When all leaves and debris are removed, spray with an insecticide and fungicide.
- Don't pack the plants too tightly together.
- Provide some sort of covering, some insulating material to protect from frosts.

According to Garden Lore: -

'The weather of October is usually distinguished by its variability, heavy rains, high winds and sharp frosts...

There is generally a sharp frost about the 12th, and anything likely to be injured... Should be under shelter by the end of the first week.'

POEM OF THE MONTH

IN AUTUMN YEARS taken from 'Gardening in Slippers' by Liz Cowley

In autumn years one's memory is not quite what it used to be, and names escape one frequently.	and then I can't consult a book. no book will get me off the hook because I won't know where to look.
and not just people's names, that's true (though that is bad enough to do) but plant names too, and quite a few.	Without its name, the glossary will now be of no help to me. Frustrating – fading memory.
Whatever can that flower be? Whatever is it called, that tree? Some names just won't come back to me.	I'll have to plough through every page and that, of course, will take an age. I guess most gardeners reach this stage!

FUCHSIAS IN MY GARDEN

CLOVERDALE PEARL hybridised by Cliff Gadsby

There is a special class in the Derby & District Fuchsia & Gardening Society's schedule; -

Class 13 – One pot, Cliff Gadsby Cultivar – Any Size Pot

GROWING FUCHSIAS

◀ Cutting back my fuchsias is a lengthy job and needs all my favourite tools at hand: - labels; scissors; secateurs; scoop.

Here's a fuchsia (I think it is 'Lynn Cunningham') which is half way through its transformation. Such a shame to cut back all those lovely flowers! ➤
